Summary

I've spent 25 years working where innovation collides with regulation, and I've done it from both sides of the table. As an FCA Manager, I supervised 264 banks and helped draft the playbook for cryptocurrency regulation when no one knew what they were doing. Before that, I ran trading operations across London, Hong Kong, and Tokyo, managing billions in derivatives and learning firsthand why rules matter. Today, I help financial institutions and regulators solve problems that didn't exist five years ago: How do you prevent financial crime when money moves through blockchain? How do you govern AI systems making lending decisions? How do you build compliance frameworks for technology that's still being invented? I translate between the people building tomorrow's financial system and the people responsible for keeping it safe because I've been both.
